Where Do I Start?

Check out the library's Research Portal at <http://po.librarypass.org> . Click on the menu item "Databases" at the top. This site also has research tips, tutorials, podcasts, news and announcements, so bookmark it and check it often!

We recommend you start this process early to avoid a research melt-down when a deadline is looming.

Visit us in Bldg. 55 to view our collections, check out books and receive research help.

I Want to Start Searching – What Do I Do Next?

You can click on "Enter the Academic Databases Portal" or browse the list of databases available to you. Whichever you choose, you'll need to login with the same username/password combination you use for your POC computer/email.

Remember: never share your login information with anyone.

I See Lots of Options – What Does it All Mean?

MetaSearch & Quicksearch: Search 15 databases of your choice simultaneously – not all databases can be searched in conjunction with other sources, so you may want to search some databases independently.

Find Database: Do you know exactly which database(s) you want to search in? Find it with Find Database. Click on the information icon ("i") to learn more about each database.

Journal Quick Search: Looking for a particular online journal? Search for it with this tool – follow the onscreen prompts to be directed to the database in which the journal you seek is hiding!

I'm Totally Lost! Help!

Navigating databases and finding information can be tricky and frustrating – we get it. Call for help when you need it, and remember to allow plenty of time to adjust to the research learning curve. Better yet, attend our classes and drop by for an orientation to library services. Visit the library's Research Portal to email/call us, chat with us online, join us in a virtual room, or make an appointment to receive in-depth assistance: <http://po.librarypass.org> .
